

How the West will be Lost

Western civilization will be lost, and carbon-based life forms, declaring carbon a poison, are the cause. Every carbon atom in the human body was originally in the CO₂ molecule. CO₂ is plant food which is needed for photosynthesis and life on this planet. The energy from the sun is only harnessed by plants with CO₂. Anti-carbon is essentially anti-human.

If a human stumbles onto a process to materially sequester carbon (CO₂), the ultimate weapon of mass destruction will have been found. If the CO₂ level drops from the current level of just over 420 ppm to 150 ppm, plants will die and life on Earth will end. This is a real threat while a temperature increase of two degrees Celsius is not.

How likely is such a temperature increase? The solar activity is currently at a minimum, and the Earth is slipping into another Little Ice Age (1300 to 1850).

Nobody in their right mind should let politicians scare the populace with false science. The climate will do what it does, and humans will adapt. Humans cannot control the climate, and the claim that they can with a trace gas constituting 0.042% of the atmosphere is absurd.

Clearly, politicians are not qualified to control the energy sector. Free market capitalism and the process of discovery should be unfettered, so that the best energy will present itself. However, because of an erroneous fear of plant food, the government puts its finger on the scale with crippling regulations and misguided green subsidies. Science must be free from the demands of those who provide the funding, and the consumer must be allowed to choose energy without government interference.
